Objectives of the Campaign

Cost of Highland dress

The organizations leading the civic drive to raise a Highland regiment in Hamilton struck an agreement with the federal government. The latter would pay the normal costs associated with the reserves: an armoury for training, regular (non-Highland) uniforms, pay, training, and a tiny allowance to maintain kilts; the Regiment would have to pay the balance of the costs of its Highland uniforms and its Pipes & Drums. This agreement has been in place since 1903.

ARF, in conjunction with the serving battalion, maintains and operates the Regimental Kit Stores (RKS) valued at $550,000. Although the RKS still has some kilts from 1903, Highland kit, like all clothing, does wear out and must be replaced. It costs approximately $6,500 to outfit an officer; $4,500 for a non-commissioned officer or sergeant; and $2,500 for a soldier.

ARF wants to increase its capital from $270,000 to $450,000 to increase its annual disbursements for new Highland kit.

Cost of Pipes & Drums

For many years, the Pipes & Drums (P&D) supported itself by the fees for its performances. A change in regulations has reduced the amount of funding available from this source. As a result, the P&D are now integrating with ARF and the ARF kit stores. The P&D's stores are worth approximately $200,000, of which about half is now in need of immediate replacement. Because the P&D is the Regiment's "footprint in the community," it uses its dress uniforms more frequently and, hence, they do not last as long as those of the Regiment's rifle companies. They may last 5 to 10 years and possibly 20. The P&D, therefore, requires about a significant annual investment to maintain its stock in good condition. It costs about $4,000 to outfit a drummer (without drums) and $4,000 for a piper (without pipes)

The ARF needs $100,000 to meet the band's immediate needs and to add a capital of $270,000 to its Highland dress fund to provide the P&D with an annual disbursement to meet its needs.

Cost of the First World War monuments overseas

ARF will erect four monuments in France and Belgium to commemorate the Regiment's service and sacrifice in the First World War. The work of selection, research, and writing is done by volunteers free of charge. The costs are: the manufacture of the plaques, their transportation to France or Belgium; and the costs of erecting them there where the municipalities maintain them.

The approximate costs per monument are $10,000.

Refurbishment of the First War 91st Monument in Hamilton

This monument was erected on the outside of the John Foote Armouries in 1921 by the Regiment; it recognizes the Regiment's service in the First World War. It was designed by a local Hamilton architect himself a veteran of that war and badly wounded in it.

The cost of its refurbishment is: $15,000.

Publication of "It Can't Last Forever: The 19th Battalion and the Canadian Corps in the First World War"

The Regiment's history during the First War was not written, as planned, in the aftermath of that great conflict. In the second ARF capital campaign, the Argyll Centennial Campaign of 2001-02, the ARF commissioned a history of the 19th Battalion, CEF, by Dr David Campbell. A young historian who had recently completed a history of the 2nd Division, of which the 19th was a part, Campbell was an obvious choice. Five years later, ARF had a draft manuscript which has now been rewritten and edited. The volume is tentatively scheduled for publication in late 2016.

The cost of editing, adding maps and pictures, and publication is: $70,000

Donor Recognition

ARF has planned an array of features for recognizing donors. Donors over $25,000 will receive beautifully designed plaques acknowledging their generosity; all names (according to breakdown of giving) will go on a permanent legacy wall contained with the John Foote Armouries; a virtual legacy wall will be maintained on the Regimental website; e-mail recognition will be sent to all members of the Regimental family.

All Donors will also receive a Regimental Ballantyne's figurine commemorating one of the three major events in the Regiment's history: WWI, WWII, and Afghanistan or engraved crystal. Donors over $25,000 will receive three-year free membership in the Officer's Mess; donors over $50,000 will receive five-year membership; donors over $100,000 will receive lifetime memberships.
